Coming up

On the bright side

- The Palo Alto Community Fund has awarded $385,000 to 42 nonprofits this year. Among them: Beyond Barriers Athletic Foundation in Menlo Park, which got $12,500 grant for its aquatics program serving underprivileged children; Heroes Voices, which got a $5,000 grant for its Guitar Corps program that gives guitars to veterans to help treat brain and psychological injuries; and Avidadas in Palo Alto, which got $7,500 for a care program for low-income adults. In addition to grants awarded during the annual grant cycle, the fund gave $1,000 to Abilities United to help replenish stolen camping gear. For a list of grantees, visit www.paloaltocommfund.org/pacggrantees. The grants are made possible by the support of local residents and the David and Lucile Packard Foundation.

- The Center for Early Learning at Silicon Valley Community Foundation, based in Mountain View and San Mateo, received a $1.5 million grant from the Pritzker Children’s Initiative to support a three-year effort to make early learning a state budget and policy priority.

Quote of the week

“Start-up fundraising in Silicon Valley wouldn’t function without Chinese
Coming up

On the bright side

- The Palo Alto Community Fund has awarded $385,000 to 42 nonprofits this year. Among them: Beyond Barriers Athletic Foundation in Menlo Park, which got $12,500 for its aquatics program serving underprivileged children; Heroes Voices, which got a $5,000 grant for its Guitar Corps program that gives guitars to veterans to help treat brain and psychological injuries; and Avenidas in Palo Alto, which got $7,500 for a care program for low-income adults. In addition to grants awarded during the annual grant cycle, the fund gave $1,000 to Abilities United to help replenish stolen camping gear. For a list of grantees, visit www.paloaltocommfund.org/pacfgrantees. The grants are made possible by the support of local residents and the David and Lucile Packard Foundation.

- The Center for Early Learning at Silicon Valley Community Foundation, based in Mountain View and San Mateo, received a $1.5 million grant from the Pritzker Children’s Initiative to support a three-year effort to make early learning a state budget and policy priority.

Quote of the week

“Start-up fundraising in Silicon Valley wouldn’t function without Chinese